Our baby-inspired design for Baby Birthday Invitations is easy to browse, easy to customize and free to download, send online with RSVP or print at home! And your party plan? We can help a little bit there, too. We've collected a few tips for a successful party for your Terrific Teether! It is not news to you that even very small children can have great hoies! Start planning your party by looking at your favorite colors, toys, characters, and food and how you can combine one or more of them into the Birthday Party. Keep it at the top of your list to create an event that lets you and Baby both have a great time as you build a great memory! If your child is fully attached to a licensed character, you can still control the costs, starting with your invitation. Choose one of our add-a-photo designs that coordinate with the character's color, and insert a photo of your child holding a chic version of the fancy figure. For decorating your side, limit licensed items to one or two important pieces, and use solid color accessories in colors suitable for peripherals such as balloons and napkin. When it's candle time, get ready to intervene at a glance. Young children have access to flames like blows on it! Hot air balloon safety is another concern with more young settings. Many people recommend using only leaf/mylar balloons, as rubber versions can become a choking hazard when they turn on. Even then, keep an eye on the hanging ribbon. Stay vigilant is a constant when caring for babies and toddlers, but it is especially important to add people and other materials that are not normally in the mix! Remember to name a friend or family member as a party photographer. You may be busy at the most rewarding moments, and you also need to be in some of those photos! When it was all said and done, snapshots became our most vivid memories of important events. Be firm about keeping your plan under control, including as many ideas made in advance as possible, and you're on your way to a Baby Birthday Party you can look back on with a smile!
